The Ship-Worm.

The world is indebted to M. Quaterfages, the eminent French naturalist, for a knowledge of the life history of the Teredo nivalis, properly called the ship-worm. This destructive little to be well worth the expenditure of the small it perforates with tubular galleries, where it spends its life alternately tunneling and feeding on the fine raspings or chips it makes. Planks pear outwardly whole and perfect, will often on under the slightest weight. A piece of deal has its immersion. M. Quaterfages relates that a boat raised four months after it had foundered on GREAT CARE FOR THIS MARKET! Ever Seen in this City! the coast near Port St. Sebastin was so wormeaten that it was utterly useless.

The curious part of the Teredo's tunneling is, that, although its galleries may perforate every part of the wood and destroy its entire substance, they never communicate. Some instinct informs the little miner when it has reached a furrow holgrain unless it meets with some obstruction.

Early in the eighteenth century the Teredo atened to annihilate the country by consuming the the tollowing list of Revolutionary battles: ened to annihilate the country by consuming the

Although the Teredo is called a worm, it is really an acephalous molluse, and wears from its birth a little bivalve shell. But in the progress from infancy to maturity it undergoes singular transformations. It is hatched from a small, round, yellowish-green egg, and is at first naked and motionless. It is soon covered with vibratile cilia, after which it swims about for fortyeight hours. At the end of this time the cilla disappear, and the young Teredo sinks to the bottom. Already seeds of the Para Caoutchouc tree have been introduced. This tree is supposed to yield the best rubber, as being more tenscions, purer, and more darable than any other kind, and is therefore more largely employed in the manufacture of articles in which elasticity is required. The caoutchook tree of Mexico (known to botanists as Castillon elastica and Markhamiana.) and a valuable kind (Valica) found in Madagascar, have, we understand, been applied for. Some of our indigenous plants, especially that found so commonly in Assam-the Ficus elastica-yield excellent rubber; and a climber in the Straits, known as the Urcoola elastica, which attains an immense length, as she lay in bed in a state of intoxication. ROWING AGAINST THE TIDE.-About thirty miles above Wilmington, North Carolina, lived three fellows, named respectively, Barham, Grey, and Stone, on the banks of the North East river. They came down to Wilmington in a small row boat, and made it fast to the wharf. They had a time of it in the city, but for fear they would be dry before they got home, they procured a jug of whisky and after dark, of a black night, too, they embarked in their boat, expecting ts reach homs in the morning. > GET CLOSES TOGETHER .- Two men met who at first sight hated each other. There was a mutual repulsiveness between them. Neither would ever consent to be introduced to the other, or remain in his company under any circumstances. Both ate at the same table where perhaps twenty others dined, but they were always at opposite ends. At some fancied grievance, one day, one threw a dish at the other's head, and it required the interposition of friends to prevent what otherwise would doubtless have been a tragical scene. Things went on this way for months, the batred of each growing more intense, and must have colminated in serious trouble to both if it continued your husband is concealed, and both you and much longer. Circumstances, however, threw them together in such a way, one day as to compel them to recognize each other. I thought you were intending to practice the veterinary." " Well, I'll tell you, Colonel: I did practice at that, and expected to keep on at it: but it's so awkward, sometimes, you know; a valuable horse dies on your hands, and there's a devlish sight of talk about it-everybody speculates upon what the borse was worth, and how he might have been saved; and there's a chance for a suit of damages-malpractice, and all that; but in this family physician line, if a child slips "WHAR'S DE USE?"-He was as black a negro | the hooks, or somebody's wife or mother-in-law whole story, and there s none of that foolish talk.
